

Department of Criminal Justice and Forensic Science

Assistant Professor (Tenure-Track)

The Department of Criminal Justice and Forensic Science at Hamline University invites applications for a tenure-track Assistant Professor position to begin fall 2014. The department offers an undergraduate major and minor in criminal justice, and a certificate and minor in forensic science. The current posted position would support teaching and research for the criminal justice major and minor program.

Areas of specialization are open but teaching and research interests in any of the following areas are desirable: criminal justice/corrections policy evaluation, stratification, neighborhoods and crime, drug policy, policing and law enforcement, and victimization. The successful candidate will be expected to teach undergraduate courses in Criminology, Introductory Criminal Justice courses, and topics related to their areas of expertise, as well as show evidence of active scholarship and research agenda.

The position includes a teaching load of six courses per academic year, with a one course reduction during the first year. A Ph.D. in Criminology, Sociology, or Criminal Justice required; ABD applicants with expected defense dates by August 30th, 2013 will also be considered. A Juris Doctorate (J.D.) or Ed.D. alone are not suitable terminal degrees for this position.
