For each of the last sixteen years, Hamline has sent a team of students, staff, and faculty to the National Conference on Race and Ethnicity in Higher Education. NCORE is a five-day gathering of people whose work and passion addresses race and racism on college campuses—in classrooms, co-curricular activities, administrative practices, campus policies, campus life—and offers social justice education and training. Hamline team members have returned to campus with new energy, great ideas for programs, connections with nationally known scholars and activists, and a commitment to sharing their learning with the campus community. Among Hamline’s on-going events inspired by NCORE are the lunchtime conversations "This is My Story," the annual NCORE Winter Mini-Conference (held in January each year) and curricular and/or co-curricular initiatives.
